Proposal to Ban Hizb ut Tahrir: Whose Speech Leads to Violence?

Rather than explaining Bondi through its facts, its facts are being painfully distorted to fit a predetermined narrative.

Whatever the facts say, whoever its perpetrators and victims are, whatever the context in which the Bondi attacks occurred, antisemitism must be the centre of the conversation, in particular, radical Islam's alleged violent expression of it.

Zionist advocates are determined to lay blame for Bondi at the feet of Islam, despite the AFP Commissioner Kristy Barrett insisting Bondi was not motivated by religion nor were the perpetrators part of an Islamist inspired network.

But in a persistent but predictable effort to conflate anti-Zionism with antisemitism, Zionist advocates insist Islam fosters Jew hatred, and Islam's natural presence in society creates an environment in which antisemitism breeds, and inevitably, anitsemite attacks occur. A charge emanating from a people who have spent the last two years championing a genocide!

So whose speech actually leads to violence?

The dehumanisation of Palestinians by Zionist advocates paved the way for the first genocide in 1947. Decades of propaganda paved the way for the latest instance of genocide in Gaza. Zionist occupiers in Palestine, supported by loyal advocates in this country, have repeatedly championed the collective punishment of Palestinians, the dispossession of their land and the genocide of its people. Hundreds of thousands of Palestinian deaths resulted, millions of lives uprooted and entire cities levelled over the heads of their inhabitants.

But the world is supposed to forget these basic facts because fifteen people lost their lives at Bondi through the actions and motivations of perpetrators that have yet to be factually determined.

The speech Zionist advocates are determined to criminalise has nothing to do with antisemitism and everything to do with anti-Zionism. They want to outlaw criticism of the Zionist entity and its right to inflict genocidal violence upon Palestinians.

Not only is the Zionist entity not held to account for its crimes, colonialist countries, who have inflicted infinitely greater violence on the rest of the world, provide every diplomatic cover to shield the entity from accountability. Why would they do otherwise when it is their money and weapons enabling the genocide?
